SWORD COAST SIDE QUESTS

This adventure module is meant to help the DM with providing content to their players. This adventure is intended to run in the Forgotten Realms Setting, but it can be compatible with any campaign setting, published module, or homebrew adventure.

Need to get your player characters (PC's) to a higher level before beginning your next adventure? Want a way to get some loot into the hands of your PC's before they start another long quest? Or do you just need a little more filler in the campaign you already have going? Then Sword Coast Side Quests is for you!

This adventure module is meant more as a guide than a concrete structure for this quest. The challenges and foes in this module are meant to be challenging to four (4) to six (6) player characters of 1st-3rd level. If you have more or fewer PC's, then you will need to adjust the number of foes and the difficulty of the traps and other challenges.

THE LEGEND OF KRAGNOROTH THE DRUNK

Kragnoroth the Drunk originally hailed from the city of Luskan. He was a ship member on Ship Suljack, where he served as a pirate. One night, Kragnoroth and a couple of his shipmates undertook an unsanctioned raid on a nobleman's pleasure yacht. The three raiders snuck aboard and swiped a large chest full of gold and jewels. It was so heavy it nearly sank the rowboat they used to get away in the night.

After taking such a large prize, Kragnoroth became afraid of retribution, both from the nobleman and his captain, so he and his friends decided to run to the hills and hide out. Along the way, the three bandits found others looking to live life as they are, and began to gather a gang. Going from town to village, drinking and gathering followers, they decided to officially organize and set up a base of operations, from which they can raid the local countryside.

The gang became known as the Flying Drunks shortly after locating a nearby cave. There was a waterfall close to the cave, with a nice pool for swimming at the bottom. Kragnoroth's lieutenant, his longtime friend and shipmate, Joffner, came up with an idea for an initiation ritual. To become a part of the Flying Drunks, initiates are tossed off the waterfall into the pool below, where he or she is to swim to the other side while wearing leather armor, a short sword, and a pouch with 100 copper pieces in it.

ADVENTURE HOOKS

As DM, it will be your job to usher your PC's into this dungeon, but it will also be your job to make it appear as though the PC's chose to go there willingly. This is the art of good Dungeon Mastering, and in order to do this, here are a few suggested Adventure Hooks you could use. These are, however, only suggestions.

Appendix B also offers players a chance to make this adventure much more personal and meaningful to their characters. These background options can also be used in conjunction with Appendix C, which can provide more incentives to take down Kragnoroth the Drunk and his gang.

Local Merchants

In a nearby town, Kragnoroth the Drunk and his gang have been robbing local stores. The merchants and magistrate in this town are desperate for anyone who can help stop Kragnoroth from destroying their economy. The merchants would also like to see some of their stolen goods returned to them.

If the PC's travel to a shop or store of any kind, or if they stop at the local inn or tavern, they may hear about Kragnoroth this way. Give your PC's added incentive by having a local merchant offer a reward for bringing Kragnoroth to justice. Also, if you do not have at least four PC's, you could have the magistrate offer to guide them and help them fight the gang as an NPC.

The Drowned Initiate

Recently, a man named Ned Drummond lost a son to the Flying Drunk's initiation ritual. The PC's can meet Ned, who is extremely angry with Kragnoroth and the entire Flying Drunks gang. He wants to see Kragnoroth killed in retribution for his son's death, and will pay handsomely for proof of Kragnoroth's demise.

The Heist

Kragnoroth the Drunk is a fugitive from justice from the city of Luskan. Nobody steals on Captain Suljack's watch, at least not without giving him a cut of the profits. The PC's can be offered a job as bounty hunters, either by Captain Suljack, or through an emissary.

Alternately, rather than the Captain seeking Kragnoroth's head, it may be the nobleman who was robbed. Maybe he finally figured out what Kragnoroth had done and where he went afterward. This option could work well if the PC's are already working for a member of the upper class.

Attacked and Robbed

This is probably the easiest and most direct way to get the player characters to seek out Kragnoroth. Every band of PC's will need to rest, and many will do so at night. You could have members of the Flying Drunks attack and rob the PC's while they are camped along the road. The players can then learn of the nearby hideout, either from a captured bandit, or by the Flying Drunks' symbol on the bandits (such as a ring, a painted shield, or embossed leather armor), and matching it to the symbol displayed outside Kragnoroth the Drunk's lair. This way could also allow the players to learn of the Surface Shaft, another possible entry point into the lair.

THE ENCOUNTERS

The encounters listed here correspond to the numbers shown on the grid map. A majority of the encounters are with members of the Flying Drunks gang, but a few are encounters with giant spiders and traps. The stats for the foes and monsters are found in Appendix A of this book. The text found in the yellow boxes in most encounter sections can be read aloud to your players as a descriptive aid.

The information given in the encounters section will tell how many of a foe is present, as well as any environmental hazards or hindrances, such as traps and spider webs. The specific position of the foes or hazards are not marked on the map, making their position strictly up to the DM.

Most of the encounters will also yield some sort of treasure. Use the Treasure Tables provided to reward the players after defeating a foe.

Encounter 1

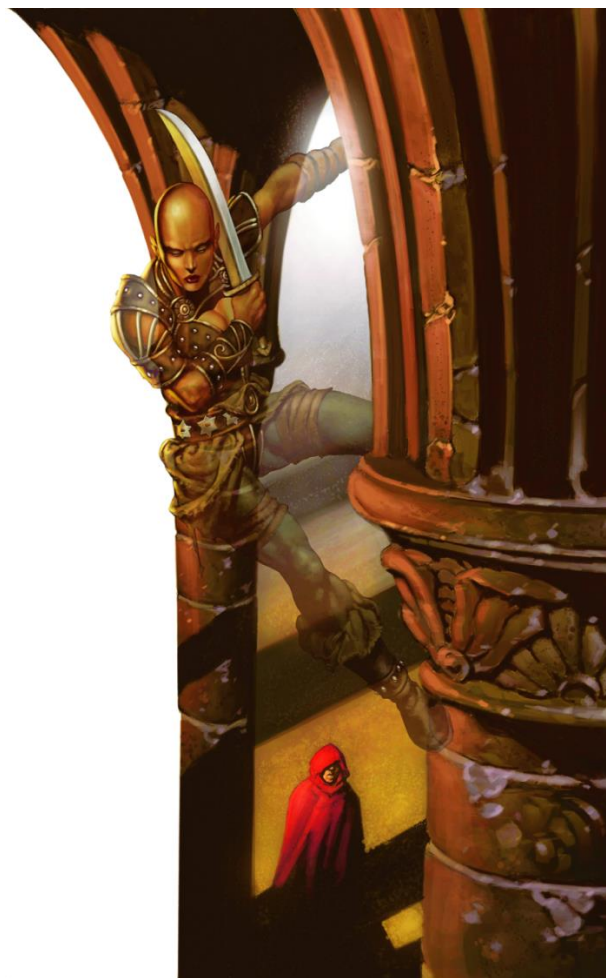

The entrance to the Flying Drunks' lair is well guarded. Four (4) Human Guards are near the entrance posted as sentries, while two (2) Human Bandits sit on stools at a table just inside the mouth of the cave. The Guards have strict orders to disallow entry to anyone who cannot show the Flying Drunk Symbol, or make the secret sign.

If the PC's happen to have an item with the symbol, or have learned the secret sign, they may make a Charisma (Deception) check, DC 15, in order to gain entry. If the PC's go this route, each encounter with a Flying Drunk gang member will require another Charisma (Deception) check of DC 15, and require the presentation of the symbol, or making the gestures of the secret sign.

The path you follow leads to a large cave entrance in the side of a massive stone bluff. Just outside the entrance is a fire pit with three large logs placed beside it as seating. To the side of the entrance, you can see a banner with the Flying Drunk's symbol. As you approach the opening, you see four human guards carrying spears and shields also emblazoned with the symbol. Two other human figures can be seen seated on stools at a table slightly inside the mouth of the cave.

Encounter 2

There are four (4) Human Bandits in this room, who serve as secondary guards. This area is well lit, and the path passes very near the bandits. It would be impossible for the PC's to sneak passed these men without being noticed, unless they had a magical aid, such as invisibility. Unless the PC's took the Deception route at the first encounter, they will have to fight. If two (2) of the bandits fall dead, the other two will attempt to flee into the next room between Encounters 2 and 3.

You travel about 80 feet into the cave when you see a crudely carved archway opening into a partially finished room. Light guides your way from sconces on the wall. Inside the crudely carved room stands a weapon rack on your right, and a table with four human men drinking and playing cards on your left.

Encounter 3

In this room are one (1) Female Yuan-ti Pureblood and two (2) Female Human Bandits. The Yuan-ti Pureblood is named Vanessa. She is Kragnoth's love interest. Vanessa will fight until both her attendants are dead, and she is at half health. At that point, she will attempt to flee or surrender. Among Vanessa's possessions is a key to the door in Encounter 7.

Vanessa will have the coin from the Individual Treasure Table above, as well as treasure from the Yuan-ti Treasure table. She will also have a key in her possession as mentioned above.

After following the winding tunnel deeper into the lair, you come across a well-furnished room complete with an area rug, two wine barrels, a table, four chairs, and a silk bedroll with silk pillows on it. Inside this dimly lit room stands two female bandits and a third, strange, almost serpentine-looking female.

Encounter 4

This encounter includes one (1) Satyr and four (4) Human Bandits. This area is the main party room for the Flying Drunks. The main feature of the room is the large dining tables, which are very sturdy and well-built. The chairs surrounding these two tables are also intricately decorated and well-built, giving the impression that they may have belonged to a very wealthy person at one time.

The Satyr and the Bandits in this room are drinking, singing, and playing instruments. Although the Flying Drunks in this room are engaged in song and revelry, the room is too well-lit, and the tables too well placed, to allow the players to sneak by unnoticed.

The singing satyr will have coin from the Individual Treasure table above, as well as treasure from the Satyr Treasure table below. If the players are having trouble with the encounters, you may want to award them the Scroll of Animal Friendship, as well as another item from the Satyr Treasure Table.

Passing through a large, open area with many stalagmites and stalactites scattered throughout the dim chamber, you begin to see a light up ahead, and start to hear the sound of music and singing. As you get closer, you see a large banquet hall, with two long wooden tables, several torches along each wall, and many barrels of wine. Seated at the larger and nearer of the two tables are four bandit men, each holding a musical instrument. Atop the table stands a humanoid figure with goat-like legs, singing and drinking from a silver goblet.

Encounter 5

This encounter consists of six (6) Human Bandits and one (1) Wolf. In this encounter, you could have a couple different things occur. First, the bandits along with their wolf are simply moving toward the great hall, where Encounter 4 took place. The second option would be that these foes have discovered the PC's, and have set an ambush for them.

Area five (5) is another large opening where there are many stalagmites and stalactites, which can offer chances to hide. The dead-end passage near this area is a wine barrel storage room. There is no light at all in the storage room, nor in area five, other than what the PC's or Bandits brought with them. The description of this encounter will depend on which direction the PC's wish to go. It will also depend on how you want the foes to act, either aware or unaware of the characters' presence.

Encounter 6

This encounter consists of four (4) Giant Wolf Spiders. It is very dark in this portion of the lair. If the PC's have light with them, or if they have darkvision, they can see a trail bypassing area number six. If they can see in this area, they also see that area six is full of spider webs.

The players can try to avoid this encounter by attempting a Dexterity (Stealth) check, versus each Giant Wolf Spider's Wisdom (Perception) checks. Basically, the DC for their Dexterity (Stealth) check is the highest of the four Wisdom (Perception) checks made by the Giant Wolf Spiders. If the PC's are carrying a light source, the Giant Wolf Spiders will make their checks with advantage.

Encounter 7

This encounter is simply a Trap and a Locked Door. Hopefully, the players will be cautious by this point. The Flying Drunks are not a gang to be taken lightly.

First, if the players attempt to open the door while it is locked, a fire trap located in the ceiling will be triggered. The Trap will do 5 (1d10) damage to anyone within five feet of the door, on a failed Dexterity Save (DC 12), or half as much on a successful save. This trap will also be triggered if the players attempt to bash down the door, or any other method of opening the door, other than using the key or picking the lock successfully. The triggering of the trap will alert the foes in area eight of the PC's presence.

The Trap can be triggered up to three (3) times.

The Locked Door can be opened with the key taken from Vanessa, the Yuan-ti Pureblood, or with a successful Dexterity (Sleight of Hand) check, DC 18.

You move through another portion of the cave, full of natural rock formations. As you move out of the darkness, a few sconces along the walls give off dim light, allowing you to see. Ahead of you is a large wooden door engraved with the Flying Drunks' Symbol.

Encounter 8

This encounter consists of four (4) Human Guards and four (4) Human Bandits. This encounter will depend heavily on how the PC's acted in Encounter 7.

If the PC's had taken the deception route at the beginning of the adventure (passing themselves off as members of the Flying Drunks), setting off the trap in Encounter 7 would nullify their chance at keeping the deception alive.

Alternately, if the PC's had made it through Encounter 7 unnoticed, they may attempt to go unnoticed passed the Human Guards and Human Bandits, who are sleeping, with a successful Dexterity (Stealth) check, DC 15.

If the PC's did NOT trigger the Trap, or in any way make loud noise while in Encounter 7, read this:

You quietly open the door and step into a large, dimly lit room with eight bedrolls laid out on the floor. In each bedroll, you can see a human figure. They all appear to be sound asleep.

If the PC's DID trigger the Trap, or in any way made loud noise while in Encounter 7, read this:

You open the door and emerge into a large, dimly lit room. You see eight bedrolls arranged on the floor, and in each of these bedrolls is a human figure, scrambling for their weapons and ready to fight.

Encounter 9

This encounter consists of one (1) Ogre sitting on a large wooden crate and two (2) Human Bandits, who are feeding the Ogre. This room contains several wine barrels and a weapon rack, with a variety of simple and martial weapons on it. This room is also well lit compared to the previous few areas. The crate on which the Ogre sits can either contain some treasure from the Ogre Treasure Table below, or it can contain stolen goods from a local merchant, if the hook used was Local Merchants.

If the PC's interrupt the feeding of the Ogre in any way, the Ogre will attack them.

Roll as many times as you want on the Ogre Treasure Table to fill the crate.

You travel on, making a long, sweeping turn from North to East. A warm glow greets you from a room up ahead. Almost directly to your front, you see a large ogre seated on a blue, sturdy wooden crate. Beside him at a table are two bandits, who are tossing food to him, careful not to get too close.

The Ogre Krowd

The Ogre living in Kragnoth's lair is known as Krowd. He is quite the legend among the Flying Drunks, even with their short history. The cave where the gang's lair is now was once only occupied by Krowd and the native spiders. The Flying Drunks came upon the cave, looking for a hideout after their major heist, not knowing of its current occupants.

The Flying Drunks were there for a few days when a couple of the bandits came up missing. Kragnoth soon figured out it was not the spiders who took his men, as the two others before, who were still stuck in the webs, but it was Krowd.

Through leaving gifts of food and drink, Kragnoth eventually won the brute's favor. It was decided by some of the men that if Krowd was going to stay on with the gang, or rather, the gang would stay on with him, he should be initiated into the Flying Drunks. However, after two more bandits perished, and another was injured terribly, it was decided that an exception would be made for ogres.

Surface Shaft

This side area can offer your players some much needed rest, or a place to run to if things get bad. The Surface Shaft is about 50 feet tall. It is just wide enough for one medium sized creature at a time to climb a rope up it. At the top, the PC's will find themselves on a very tall hill, in a quite grove of trees.

You move South out of the Ogre's room through a dim cavern. The air is much fresher and easier to breathe here. The passage ahead splits, going right where many wine barrels are stacked, and straight forward, where you see more light coming from what could be another room.

Encounter 10

This encounter consists of two (2) Orcs and two (2) Human Bandits. The Orcs and Bandits in this room are in the middle of combat training when the PC's get near. In this area is another weapon rack containing various simple and martial weapons. There is also a large supply of wine barrels near the training room.

In addition to the table below, each Orc possesses 1 Potion of Healing.

INDIVIDUAL TREASURE TABLE 2

81-100	-	-	-	1d6

As you move deeper into the lair toward the glowing light of the next room, you hear the clanging of steel and gruff voices giving commands.

Encounter 11

This encounter consists of two (2) Giant Spiders. Lighting is very poor after leaving the previous room, fading into blackness as the PC's move deeper into the lair. If the players have a light source with them, or if they have darkvision, a trail can be seen hugging the wall, going to the Southwest, then turning Southeast. They can also see that area 11 has passages going Northwest and North, and that the entire area is very dusty, dirty, and covered in spider webs.

The PC's can avoid this encounter if they make a Dexterity (Stealth) check versus the two Giant Spiders' Wisdom (Perception) checks. Basically, the DC for their Dexterity (Stealth) check is the higher of the two Wisdom (Perception) checks made by the Giant Spiders. If the PC's are carrying a light source, the Giant Spiders will make their Wisdom (Perception) checks with advantage.

Encounter 12

This encounter consists of one (1) Orc and four (4) Human Guards. Kragnoth sent out this patrol, suspecting that he is under attack. If the PC's took the deception route at the beginning of the adventure, and have maintained the deception, then this band is instead on their way to the training room in Encounter 10.

In addition to the table below, the Orc possesses 1 Potion of Healing.

INDIVIDUAL TREASURE TABLE 2

You follow the trail North into the darkness, deeper into the cave, passing by large rock formations. Up ahead, the darkness is pierced by light as you hear a door open and see five humanoid figures approaching.

Encounter 13

This encounter consists of four (4) Human Bandits, a Locked Door, and a Trap. The four Bandits are standing guard outside the room. Behind them is a section of stone wall with a heavy steel door set in it. Two torches hang on the wall, on either side of the steel door. The door is locked with a well-made lock, DC 18 to open it.

Inside the room is the store room for the entire Flying Drunks organization. Wine barrels line the Southern wall, while weapons, treasure chests, and food crates line the Eastern wall.

The trigger for the Trap is located five feet inside the store room. It is a pressure plate on the floor connected to an arrow trap. Tiny holes in the wall on the right, aimed at the entryway, are obscured by dust and cobwebs. The PC's may see them if they succeed on a Wisdom (Perception) check, DC 15. With a successful Intelligence (Investigation) check, DC 15, the PC's can discover the pressure plate. The trap activates when more than 20 pounds of weight is placed on the pressure plate, releasing four (4) arrows. Each arrow makes a ranged attack with a +8 bonus against a random target within 10 feet of the pressure plate. (If there are no targets in the area, the arrows simply strike the opposite wall.) A target that is hit takes 3 (1d6) piercing damage.

Use Individual Treasure Table 3 for the foes in this encounter. There are also three chests in the store room: one is full of trail rations, another is full of water skins full of drinkable water, and the third is full of treasure (roll on Hoard Treasure Table to determine loot).

Encounter 14

This encounter consists of a Trap and a Locked Door. This is the entryway to the final area of the lair, Kragnoroth's private chambers. There is a portion of stone wall erected, with a heavy steel door set in it, which serves as the entry to the final room.

Directly in front of the door is a pressure plate on the floor, connected to a poison dart trap. Tiny holes in the stone wall are obscured by dust and cobwebs. The PC's may see them if they succeed on a Wisdom (Perception) check, DC 15. With a successful Intelligence (Investigation) check, DC 15, the PC's can discover the pressure plate. The trap activates when more than 20 pounds of weight is placed on the pressure plate, releasing four darts. Each dart makes a ranged attack with a +8 bonus against a random target within 10 feet of the pressure plate. (If there are no targets in the area, the darts strike the opposite wall.) A target that is hit takes 2 (1d4) points piercing damage and must succeed on a DC 15 Constitution Saving Throw, taking 11 (2d10) points poison damage on a failed save, or half as much on a successful one.

The door is locked, but the key from Vanessa, the Yuan-ti pureblood will open it. If the players do not have this key, it will require a Dexterity (Sleight of Hand) check, DC 18 to open.

This portion of the cave has been walled off with stone and mortar, and a heavy steel door has been set in the middle of this wall. Two torches flank this door, which is painted with the symbol of the flying mug.

Encounter 15

This encounter consists of Kragnoroth the Drunk, a Human Thug named Joffner (Kragnoroth's Lieutenant), and two (2) Human Bandits. In this room is also three barrels of wine, Kragnoroth's personal treasure hoard, a weapon rack, a bedroll, and a table with chairs. The room is lit by sconces on the wall.

Depending on what the players do in Encounter 14, Kragnoroth and his men may wait inside the chamber, or move out to attack.

Kragnoroth and his Lieutenant give double treasure from Individual Treasure Table 3, and Kragnoroth's chest contains 200 GP, plus roll on Hoard Treasure Table.

RESOLUTION

Although this is where the printed material ends, this does not have to be the end of the adventure. The cave does not have to end in Encounter 15, but can proceed downward into the underdark, opening up other possibilities for adventure. Remember to reward the characters for their work, based on the hook used from the beginning.

This does not have to spell the end for the Flying Drunks, nor even for Kragnoroth the Drunk himself, if you so wish. Maybe Kragnoroth gets away in the end, and the players have to pursue him and his gang through many other adventures yet to come.

Appendix B: Background Options

BOUNTY HUNTER BACKGROUND

You spend your life hunting down and capturing or killing wanted criminals and monsters. You are part investigator, part hunter, and you know your way into and out of almost any situation. The best part of being a bounty hunter, however, is the cash payment, and you are very good at knowing how to get paid for your services.

Skill Proficiencies: Investigation, Perception

Tool Proficiency: Disguise kit

Languages: Any two of your choice

Equipment: 50' silk rope, lock, hunting trap, traveler's clothes, and a pouch with 10 gold pieces in it.

FEATURE: GETTING PAID

Whenever a wanted criminal is killed or captured by you or your allies, you receive a bonus payment equal to 1 gold piece per Experience Point of the wanted criminal or criminals. The time needed to receive the payment, and from whom the payment comes, is up to your DM. Also, membership in the Rusty Shackles (Appendix C), is recommended for characters with this background.

SUGGESTED CHARACTERISTICS

Bounty hunters can be a rough lot. Much of their life is spent on the road, chasing down dangerous criminals and monsters. Such a life makes casual social interactions very difficult for the bounty hunter. Cash payment is a top priority, and the glitter of gold always seems to make the day go better.

Appendix C: The Rusty Shackles Organization

The Rusty Shackles is a network of bounty hunters, informants, and officers of the law who make it their priority to remove criminals and monsters from society.

The organization is relatively new compared to other organizations, but it is well-manned, and well-funded. The Rusty Shackles often operate as lone agents throughout the Forgotten Realms, but may seek out the help of others for particularly tough assignments. The Rusty Shackles ideology is somewhat noble, even though its agents rarely are.

Motto: “Wanted: Dead or Alive. To protect and collect.”

Beliefs: The Rusty Shackles beliefs can be summarized as follows:

- The world is dangerous enough without criminals and monsters wandering around in it.
- Every crime, and every criminal, has a price to pay.
- Information is money.

Goals: Rid the world of wanted criminals and monsters, amass wealth, gain power and influence, and thereby make the world safer.

Typical Quests: Typical Rusty Shackles quests include hunting down wanted criminals, killing violent monsters, assisting local law officers, acting as undercover agents, and investigating crime.
